LIGHTNING PATH

TTT Games, part of Mascot Gaming, is releasing Lightning Path, a step-based crash game that leans into decision-making and pacing. Each round moves forward one step at a time, and every step asks the same question, stay in or take the win.

The structure is simple, but it builds tension quickly. You move along a path, multipliers grow, and the risk keeps creeping up. At any point, you can cash out. Or keep going and see how far it takes you.

Players can switch between three risk levels depending on how aggressive they want to be.

There's also a strong visual side to it. As you progress, enemies change and colors get more intense. The mini-map helps you keep track of where you are and what's ahead, which adds a bit of control to the chaos.

If you don't want to play every step manually, there are a couple of faster options. Autoplay handles consecutive rounds for you, while Instant Dash jumps straight to your chosen multiplier and resolves instantly.

On top of that, there's a ranking system tied to activity. The more you play, the higher your rank goes, unlocking new profile images along the way. It's a small touch, but it gives regular players something extra to aim for.

Margarita Malysheva

Head of Marketing at Mascot Gaming

"Lightning Path grew out of a simple idea, make each step feel like a real decision."

"We didn't want players to just watch a multiplier climb, we wanted them to feel that moment of hesitation every time they move forward."

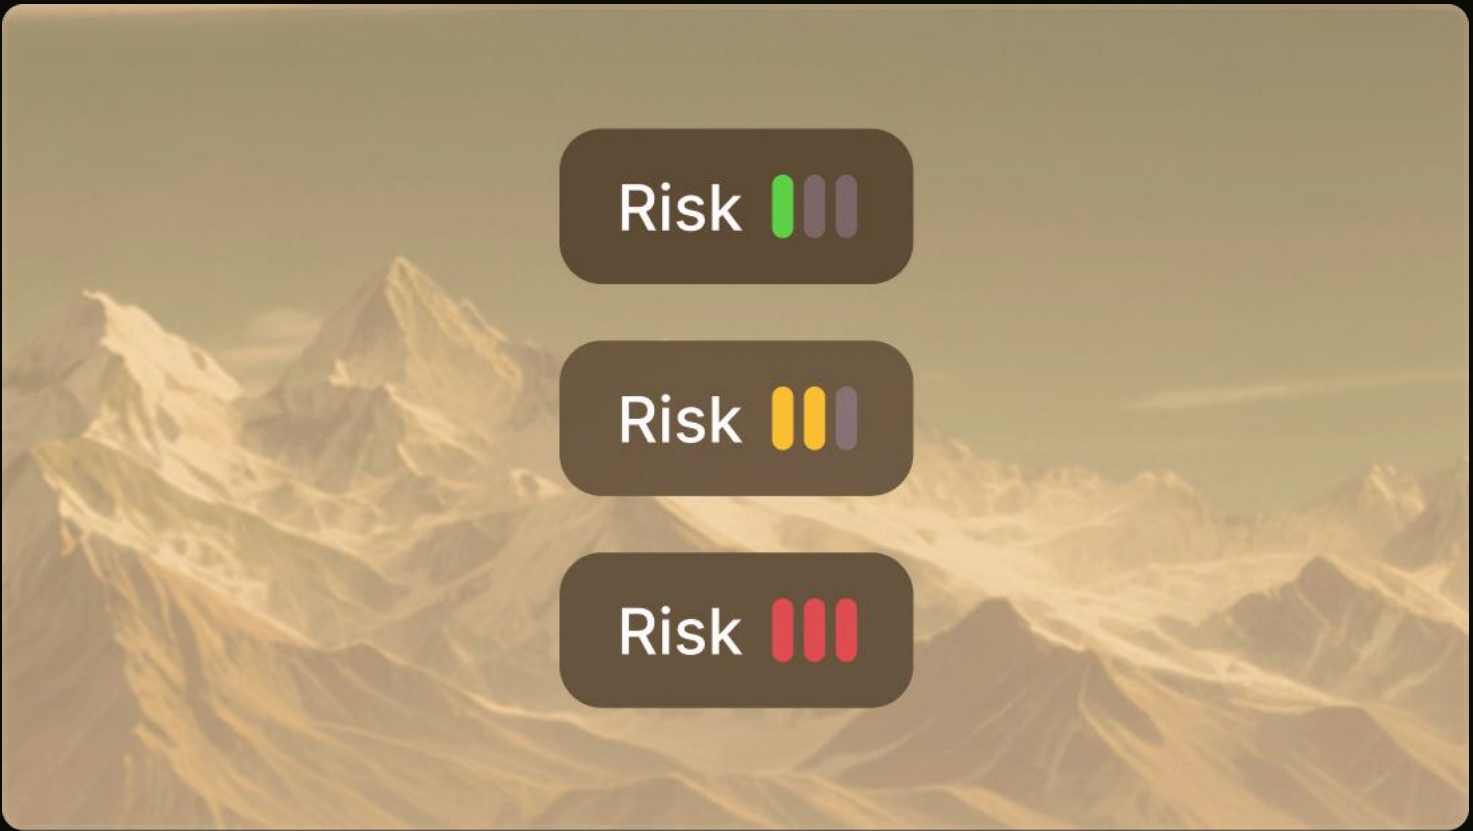

FEATURES

Step-by-Step Crash Game

A new twist on the classic crash experience

3 Risk Levels

Several risk levels, with the highest risk offering a multiplier of up to x10,000.

Visual Progression

As players advance, environments and enemies evolve in color and design, while a mini-map provides a clear overview of the path ahead, reinforcing progression and encouraging forward movement.

Instant Dash Autoplay

A fast autoplay mode allows automated rounds, while instant dash lets players reach target multipliers without delay.
